The OSB Civil Rights Section invites you to this virtual public forum.

In light of the violence at the Capitol on January 6th and its apparent planning on social media platforms, the increasing spread of disinformation and hate speech leading up to the violence, and bipartisan calls for internet speech regulation, this town hall will explore the origins of internet content regulation, the current social media regulatory landscape compared to that of other traditional media such as TV/print/radio, and how future regulations could impact the rights of social media companies, creators, and consumers.

Our esteemed panel is comprised of:

Professor Jeff Kosseff, United States Naval Academy, Author of "The Twenty-Six Words That Created the Internet"

Section 230: Regulating the Internet vs. Other Forms of Media

Renée DiResta, Technical Research Manager, Stanford University Internet Observatory

Misinformation, Disinformation, and "Ampliganda:" Our Current Information Ecosystem

Aaron Mackey, Senior Staff Attorney, Electronic Frontier Foundation

Consequences of Rewriting Platform Liability Law

Evan Greer, Director, Fight for the Future

Dangers of Regulating User-Generated Content

Moderated by Hansary Laforest, Sussman Shank LLP/Civil Rights Section Executive Committee

The public forum will include ample time for questions from the audience.
The forum is free and open to the public.
